

Territorial Evolution, 1880

Abstract

In 1880, Canada acquires title to the Arctic Islands that become part of the Northwest Territories. Canada's long and diversified settlement history is reflected in the two distinct patterns of boundaries that differentiate between eastern and western Canada. The eastern boundaries closely conform to natural features such as drainage basins, while the boundaries of western and northern Canada reflect the administrative organisation of these lands by, first, the Hudson's Bay Company and later the Government of Canada.

Canada

When Canada took over the Northwest Territories, they included the continental territories whose waters flowed into the Arctic and Pacific Oceans. On July 31, 1880, an Imperial Order in Council transferred to Canada all of the British territories and possessions left in North America (except for the colony of Newfoundland), and also the islands next to these territories and possessions. This document transferred the Arctic Islands to Canada, but it did not describe the territory added to Canada or its boundaries.

Animation of the territorial evolution of Canada from 1867 to 1999

The animation, Territorial Evolution 1867 to 1999_e.gif is located in the animated gif folder.

Canada's boundaries are dynamic political structures that reflect the changing political, economic and cultural conditions of the country through time. This animation shows sequentially the history of boundary changes in Canada from Confederation to the creation of Nunavut.
